THE STUDY OF ENGLISH.

CONFERENCE OF PROFESSORS IN COL-LEGES AND PREPARATORY SCHOOLS. The third biennial conference of professors of English in colleges and preparatory schools opened yesterday morning at the University Law School,

Washington Square. The question of the continu-ance or modification of the system of entrance examinations in English agreed upon at the conference three years ago was the most important topic

The Board of Regents was represented by Pro-The Board of Regents was represented by Pro-fessors Davidson, Richard Jones and Cobb, the New-York State educational system by Superin-tendent Skinner, the pedagogic interests by Pro-fessor Nicholas Murray Butler, the National Teachers' Association by Principal Nightingale, of Chicago, and the Beard of Education by Commis-Chicago, and the Board of Education by Commisthe Southern States. The conference was preceded by a closed execu-tive meeting. Professor Stodiard, of New York University, was chosen chairman of the confer-ence at this meeting and Professor Albert S. Cook.

of Yale, secretary.

In opening the conference Professor Stoddard said that there were two questions to be considered One of these questions had been brought about by the great extension of the high school system

One of these questions had been brought about by the great extension of the high school system. Heretofore college preparation has been done largely at preparatory schools. Now much of it was done in public high schools. The question was whether it is worth while to have an exclusive system of education, or whether legislation should be asked to make such a course of instruction in these schools that teachers could give a little more comprehensive instruction to students whe did not mitted to go further than the end of the high school course than to those who would carry on their work in college. The other question was whether books to be studied should confinue the same from year to year or be changed.

Professors Charles Davidson, Jones, Mott, Scott, Baker, Farrand, Doughass, Stoddard and Maxwell took part in the discussion that followed.

Commissioner Taff said that the writing of English, the expressing of one's thoughts clearly, should be the aim in teaching English. He said that he had always thought that composition was not tagen as it should be in schools and colleges. He told his own experience, saying that he had learned after leaving college about all that he knew about composition. He said that every teacher in the new high schools would have to pass an examination in English composition. He was in favor of having identical courses in high schools for those who were and those who were not intending to go to college.

Dr. Buchanan and Professors Cook, Jordan and college. Euchanan and Professors Cook, Jordan and le also snoke

Dr. Buchanan and Professors Cook, Jordan Marble also spoke.

In the afternoon an executive session was held, and at another session this morning a decision will be reached as to what will be recommended to the schools. It is probable that a fixed list of books, from which schools will be allowed to select for use in their work a fixed schedule of work for two use in their work a fixed schedule of work for two years, with some things optional to the several years, with some things optional to the several schools, and a uniform system of English work without regard to whether students intend to enter college or not, but with college preparation in view, will be recommended.
